

Reacting against the wretched emotional manipulation on display in much contemporary preaching, many of us have retreated into preaching that is intellectually rigorous but somehow a bit arid, and certainly not fashioned to incite our hearers to repentance, faith, and joyful obedience. Josh Moody and Robin Weekes want to retain the rigor while going after the heart – not ‘heart’ in the contemporary sense, but in the biblical sense, aligned with what Jonathan Edwards calls the ‘affections’. Moody and Weekes encourage us to preach to the affections – not simply the emotions, but the very center of our being, everything that inclines us to think and act and move, and not merely learn. For some, this little book will be a healthy reminder; for others, it will revolutionize their preaching.

D. A. Carson

Research Professor of New Testament
Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, Illinois

This book will be a great help to many who, like me, have begun to be more aware of the importance of preaching to the heart, but have not always quite known how to do it. It is reassuring in its reaffirmation of the importance of faithful exegesis and avoidance of sentimentality, challenging in pushing us to work harder where many preachers have been weak, and really helpful in the practical wisdom it offers. It has not only convinced me of the importance of preaching to the affections, but has also inspired me to think that I must and can do this better.

Vaughan Roberts

Rector of St Ebbe’s, Oxford and President of the Proclamation Trust, London

Moody and Weekes offer a wise reminder that the truth of a sermon – no matter how logically and accurately it reflects Scripture – denies the power of the Word if there is no intention to affect the heart of the listener (or if the preacher is not also personally affected by the Word). The ways we are affected by the Word are our witness of its significance. To proclaim truth without an intended impact upon the attitudes and actions of those who hear it suggests either that the Word is without true meaning or we are to receive it without appropriate synchrony of heart and life.

Bryan Chapell
Pastor, Grace Presbyterian Church
Peoria, Illinois

On the first Easter morning two people walking with him had the Scriptures opened up to them by a stranger; so much so that ‘the fire burned’ within them as in Psalm 39:3. Messrs Moody & Weekes, with plenty of good sense, would encourage us preachers to reach the hearts of our listeners. Do they have all the answers? Possibly not. Are they making a timely point? I think they are.

Dick Lucas
Formerly Rector of St Helen’s Bishopsgate, London

‘True religion, in great part, consists in holy affections’, said Jonathan Edwards. The trouble today is that people don’t quite know what those ‘affections’ are, leaving us with a false choice: emotionalism or woodenness. This book turns on the lights, helping preachers understand how hearts and lives can be affected by truth. I’m thrilled to see this book, handling such an important subject so well.

Michael Reeves
Director of Union and Senior Lecturer
Wales Evangelical School of Theology, Bridgend, Wales

BURNING HEARTS

Preaching to the Affections

Josh Moody
and
Robin Weekes

PT RESOURCES
CHRISTIAN
FOCUS

Unless otherwise indicated Scripture quotations are taken from The Holy Bible, English Standard Version, copyright © 2001 by Crossway Bibles, a division of Good News Publishers. Used by permission. All rights reserved.

Josh Moody (PhD, University of Cambridge) is senior pastor of College Church in Wheaton, Illinois. His books include Journey to Joy, No Other Gospel, and The God-Centered Life. For more, visit www.GodCenteredLife.org.

Robin Weekes has pastored churches in Delhi, India and London, UK where he currently serves as the Minister of Emmanuel Church Wimbledon. He has also been involved with training Bible teachers both in North India and through being on the teaching staff of the PT Cornhill Training Course in London. He is married to Ursula, and together they have been entrusted with three young children.

Copyright © Josh Moody and Robin Weekes 2014

ISBN 978-1-78191-403-8

10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

Published in 2014

by

Christian Focus Publications,
Geanies House, Fearn, Ross-shire,
IV20 1TW, Scotland, Great Britain with

Proclamation Trust Resources,
Willcox House, 140-148 Borough High Street,
London, SE1 1LB, England, Great Britain.

www.proctrust.org.uk

www.christianfocus.com

Cover design by Daniel van Straaten

Printed by Nørhaven, Denmark

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form, by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise without the prior permission of the publisher or a licence permitting restricted copying. In the U.K. such licences are issued by the Copyright Licensing Agency, Saffron House, 6-10 Kirby Street, London, EC1 8TS. www.cla.co.uk

CONTENTS

Introduction	9
1. What are affections?	13
2. What is preaching?	25
3. Why preach to the affections?	39
4. How do you preach to the affections?	51
5. An Appeal: Preach to the affections of our age of affections	67
A worked example of preaching to the affections from:
6. Colossians 3:1-11	77
7. Isaiah 54:5	93
8. Mark 9:33-50	107
9. Revelation 3:7-13	121
Conclusion:
Preaching to the affections without sentimentality	135

They said to each other, 'Did not our hearts burn within us while he talked to us on the road, while he opened to us the Scriptures?'
(Luke 24:32)

Introduction

We have a confession to make: we're both British. Okay, so one of us has lived in the U.S.A. for fifteen years, and the other of us lived in Delhi for six and a half years. But we're still British. And as everyone knows, the British are the not the most 'affectional' people. Not only are we British, but we both went to boarding schools (one of us in Essex, the other in Edinburgh). And as everyone also knows, British boarding schools (which, just to confuse our American friends, are called 'public schools') excel in many ways, but are not known to be hotbeds of affections.

So we realise that we are not the two most obvious people on the planet to be trying to write a book on how to preach to people's affections. Indeed, we're writing this book chiefly for our own benefit as we realise how much we have to learn about the place of the affections in our walk with Christ and in preaching Him to ourselves and others. This has nothing at all to do with emotional manipulation which we abhor. It has everything to do with a biblical anthropology which places the heart at the centre of who God has made us. Through preaching the Bible we have become more and more convinced that this is of great importance, and possibly a neglected theme in our generation of Bible-believing Christians. It has not always been so. Previous generations thought a great deal about the centrality of the heart in the Christian life and the need to preach to people's hearts. It may well be that this book is simply a touch on the tiller and part of a growing discussion about the re-discovery of these things.

Burning Hearts

I (Robin) want to thank Josh for his willingness to work on this book together. Josh has been doubly kind to me in my life. I first met him in 1991 as a very young Christian at university. Josh was two years above me and president of the University Christian Union. I had always had a sneaking suspicion that living flat out for Christ would somehow make life rather dull. Meeting Josh disabused me of that entirely as he modelled that Christ had come to give life in all its fullness. As a busy, older brother, he showed me great kindness and patience. More than twenty years later, with Josh infinitely busier with caring for a large family and an even larger church, I have experienced that same kindness and patience as we have worked on this book together. Thank you, Josh, for taking me on these two times.

As well as Josh, a number of others have been greatly influential in my life. I want to express my gratitude to my parents David and Jean Weekes, Christopher Ash, Mark Ashton, Jonathan Fletcher, Dick Lucas, Mark Dever, David Jackman, John Pearce, Vaughan Roberts, and the other 'three Musketeers,' Anthony Bewes, Paul Bolton and Tim Dossor. I am also grateful to Emmanuel Church Wimbledon, a church I have been privileged to have served in different capacities for fifteen years and counting.

Introduction

In terms of the book, my thanks are due to the students of the Proclamation Trust Cornhill Training Course in London 2010-2013 who were guinea pigs for some of this material. I also want to thank those who have taken time to read sections of this book and given me helpful feedback, not least Adrian Reynolds and David Jackman, the editors of PT Resources. I also want to express my thanks to and love for my wife Ursula. As you may see, I am not an experienced writer. She is, and has helped me – as she has in countless other ways – learn to write. I dedicate this book (at least my part of it!) to her. But above all, I want to thank the Lord who has given me a new heart, one that is captured by His love. Echoing John Calvin’s seal and motto: ‘I offer my heart to you, Lord, readily and sincerely.’

I (Josh) want to say that Robin is far too kind and generous towards me, but that’s the kind of person he is. There are people with whom it is a chore to work, others with whom it is easy to work, and then there are those few with whom it is a joy. Working with Robin has always been a joy. I delight to hear how his ministry is flourishing, and it is a real pleasure to write this book together.

My list of people for whom I am grateful seems to grow longer each year. Thank you, the people, pastors, staff and elders of College Church for your godly example and faithful commitment to the proclamation of the gospel. Thank you, Gavin Lymberopoulos, for your research assistance. Thank you, Carolyn Litfin, my Executive Assistant, for countless hours of expertise and support. I also want to thank Phil Parker, Simon Barnes, Michael Walker, Tim Hastie-Smith, Pat Blake, Don Carson, Mark Dever, Kent Hughes, Dick Lucas and many, many others. I give thanks for the ministry of Mark Ashton, who was at St Andrew the Great when I was an undergraduate in Cambridge, and for the ministry of Eden Baptist in the same city. In particular, I would like to dedicate this book to Elijah, two weeks old as I write: may you be a prophet of the Word of God. And especially I thank Rochelle. Long ago it was said to me that your wife either halves or doubles your ministry: you have certainly doubled mine. I love doing life with you. Above all, God be praised.

*Josh Moody, College Church, Wheaton, Illinois, U.S.A.
Robin Weekes, Emmanuel Church Wimbledon, London, U.K.
February 2014*

1

What are affections?

ANOTHER COUNTRY

It was a Sunday. I (Josh) was waiting for the standard post-service handshake with the vicar. The one difference this time was that I had been abroad until recently, flying back to London the day before. I was jetlagged, sleepy and eager to connect again with my home church minister. He had always been a supporter of my involvement with student work at Cambridge, and I knew he would be excited to hear how the work was going in the far-flung corner of the world to which I had temporarily relocated.

The person before me performed the shake-smile-thank you.

Now, you have to realise that the culture where I had been was very different from South London. Only a few days before, I was immersed in a place where friends greeted each other on the street with a kiss. The accepted practice between male friends was something like this:

Burning Hearts

- left hand behind friend's head...
- right hand firmly grasp friend's hand...
- pull head towards you...
- plant kiss on cheek.

This was not how it was done in South London.

The woman in front of me went off glowing after her brief word with the preacher. It was my turn. I looked at him. My left hand moved behind his head, my right hand grasped his right hand, and I tugged with the left hand to bring his head close to mine. The look on his face was one of sheer horror.

'What have they done to him!' was the thought that flashed across his eyes.

We never actually kissed (you will be glad to know). I averted mid-flight like a jumbo jet pulling up from the runway at Heathrow. Proper protocol was resumed.

'Thank you for the sermon,' I said.

Kissing friends as a sign of affection belonged to another country. It is not what we do.

DEFINING 'AFFECTIONS'

What are affections? They are not touching, hugging, kissing, or (even) feeling: Affections are the movement of our thoughts, feelings and will towards a desired object, person or event. An affection is what inclines us to something (whereas an effect is what results from something). Affections are what move us towards action.

When we talk about preaching to the affections, we do not mean preaching that is sentimental, or touchy-feely, or lacking intellectual rigour or content. That is not preaching to the affections; that is empty-headed preaching. Nor do we mean preaching that is lacking in close attention to the text of Scripture, or that skims over the surface of the passage in order to create an easy emotional high in the hearers.

What are affections?

Affections are more than emotions (though they include them). Affections are defined by their result: they are what happens within someone when action is produced. We all know it is possible to feel something and do nothing about it. We also all know it is possible to think something and do nothing about it. But when our feelings and our thoughts are combined with a decisive will-to-action, then the internal event that generates this movement is called 'affections.'

Preaching to the affections is 'affectional preaching' (not affectionate preaching). Preaching to the affections means preaching that targets the heart. And the heart in the Bible is not merely our feelings, nor merely our thinking, but both intertwined; the heart is the centre of who we are.

Because affections are 'what move us towards action,' affections are:

- part of the brain's response to data
- necessary for rational functioning
- no more fallen or sinful naturally than reason
- orientated towards godly desires in the godly person
- not proof in themselves that someone is spiritual

Affections are part of the brain's response to data

When the Bible talks about the heart, it does not mean what most people today mean by the heart. The heart is not the seat of emotions/feelings/passions. It is the place where emotion and reason come together. The heart is the core of the person.

The primary agenda of the Bible is not to map a careful psychology of the inner life. The Bible is first and foremost a book about God and His Word to us. Nonetheless, while we use heart to mean emotions, the Bible uses heart to include emotions and thoughts and will.

Burning Hearts

‘The fool says in his heart, “There is no God”’ (Ps. 14:1), where we might say ‘I was talking to myself’ or ‘I thought to myself,’ assuming that such self-talk took place in the brain. The Old Testament word for heart means heart, centre, middle, suggesting that it is referring to the core. Heart includes the personal, emotional, intellectual and volitional (see Exod. 9:12; Judg. 18:20; Deut. 7:17; 1 Sam. 2:35; 1 Sam. 16:7; 1 Kings 3:9). It includes the will, the intellect and feeling (see Mark 2:6, 8; Mark 3:5; Luke 24:32). Heart, combining emotions and thoughts, is the accepted definition today according to the New International Dictionary of Old Testament Theology and Exegesis and the Theological Dictionary of the New Testament.

We are talking about overlapping sets of feeling and thinking. There is an overlap between what the Bible calls heart and what the Bible calls gut. There is an overlap between what translators from the King James period onwards described as affections and heart, or what they called thinking or mind.

Jesus said, ‘You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your strength and with all your mind’ (Luke 10:27). Jesus is not intending to give us a series of precise distinctions about the inner workings of people. Instead He is saying that the first commandment is to love God with absolutely everything you have – heart, soul, strength and mind, each of which integrates. These terms are less like distinct categories and more like a Venn diagram of overlapping sets.

Affections are necessary for rational functioning

Even though emotions are integrated with rational functioning, emotions can still disturb clear thinking. Emotions sometimes get in the way of being rational. That is why we do not expect a judge in a court case to be related to one of the parties, why we realise that we might not be thinking clearly if we have not eaten properly, and why it is typical advice to avoid making any major decisions after a serious bereavement. Physical, hormonal, circumstantial changes can alter emotions, and emotions can cloud reasonable and logical action.

What are affections?

But there is also evidence that without emotion our rational capacity would be diminished. People who spend their days and nights dreaming up ways to create artificial intelligence wonder whether our ability to create computers that think will be limited by our ability to create computers that feel. Even some of the most rationalistic philosophers have agreed. Immanuel Kant, hardly a sentimental man, said that 'nothing great is ever done without passion.' The case of Phineas Gage appears to confirm the interrelation of emotion and reason. In 1848, the construction foreman Gage had a large iron bar driven through his head. Amazingly, he did not lose consciousness, even making a full recovery apart from loss of vision in his left eye. Gage, though, no longer showed appropriate respect for ethical convention. He made decisions that violated his own personal interest. A more recent 'Gage,' Elliot, had a tumour the size of an orange removed from his brain. Elliot also recovered, including mentally, but he became unable to make decisions. Elliot noted that his feelings had changed. While he appeared able to examine logical options, he was not able to come to a conclusion. He lacked the emotional kick to bring him to the point of decision.

The neuroscientist Antonio Damasio examined these and other matters in his book Descartes' Error, concluding that emotion, far from interfering with rational function, was essential to it.¹ Similarly, bestselling books like

1. Antonio Damasio, Descartes' Error (London, U.K.: Penguin Books, 2005).

Burning Hearts

Malcolm Gladwell's Blink and Sheena Iyengar's The Art of Choosing suggest that in certain circumstances – when we have developed expertise – our decisions may be best informed by our affectional responses, rather than in spite of them. For instance, a skilled and trained football player can 'over-think' when he is faced with a shot at a goal, whereas if he follows his well-honed instincts, he may be more likely to score.

The cause of this is the hard wiring of our brains. While no doubt much still needs to be discovered, and some ideas that are now current will be rejected, developments in brain mapping suggest that emotions have a 'low road' and a 'high road.' There is the immediate emotional response (high road), but then that response can become entrenched in our brain as a short cut (or low road). The ability of our brain to form such short cuts can make it very difficult to break addictive behaviours. But it can also mean that learned responses to events over time build a path of affectional wisdom. Perhaps there is a biochemical reality to the old phrase, 'Sow a thought, reap a deed; sow a deed, reap a habit; sow a habit, reap a destiny.'

Reason and emotion are both fallen

Biblically, both reason and emotion are fallen.

Consider 2 Corinthians 4:4, 'In their case the god of this world has blinded the minds of the unbelievers, to keep them from seeing the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ, who is the image of God.' Or Romans 1:21-25, 'For although they knew God, they did not honour him as God or give thanks to him, but they became futile in their thinking, and their foolish hearts were darkened. Claiming to be wise, they became fools... Therefore God gave them up in the lusts of their hearts to impurity... they exchanged the truth about God for a lie...' (emphasis added). Or 1 Corinthians 1:21, 'For

What are affections?

since, in the wisdom of God, the world did not know God through wisdom, it pleased God through the folly of what we preach to save those who believe.' Or 1 Corinthians 8:1-3, '...knowledge puffs up, but love builds up. If anyone imagines that he knows something, he does not yet know as he ought to know. But if anyone loves God, he is known by God.' In his commentary on 2 Corinthians, Paul Barnett even says that 'The Achilles' heel of man is his mind, since he is so prone to intellectual pride, especially in matters to do with religion.'²

On the other hand, while reason and emotion are both fallen, it is clear that the Bible expects Christians to exercise self-control. Part of discipline is keeping unwarranted emotions or passions in check. Galatians 5:24, 'those who belong to Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with its passions and desires.' Passages like that, and hundreds of others, like Philippians 2:12-16 ('...work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God who works in you, both to will and to work for his good pleasure. Do all things without grumbling or disputing, that you may be blameless and innocent, children of God without blemish in the midst of a crooked and twisted generation, among whom you shine as lights in the world, holding fast to the word of life...'), show that the Christian is called to exercise self-control over what would otherwise be intemperate desires.

If one person will mistakenly consider that his thoughts are sufficient to contain God ('The fool says in his heart, "There is no God"' Ps. 14:1), another will mistakenly do what feels good because it feels good (by contrast, 'I discipline my body and keep it under control, lest after preaching to others I myself should be disqualified' 1 Cor. 9:27).

2. Paul Barnett, The Message of 2 Corinthians (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity Press, 1988), p. 82.

Burning Hearts

There is a battle. Both reason and feeling must be proactively, energetically, passionately, logically, wrestled into line with God's Word: 'For though we walk in the flesh, we are not waging war according to the flesh. For the weapons of our warfare are not of the flesh but have divine power to destroy strongholds. We destroy arguments and every lofty opinion raised against the knowledge of God, and take every thought captive to obey Christ' (2 Cor. 10:3-5, emphasis added).

Some become frustrated when they hear a person say, 'Keep your emotions in line; don't trust your feelings.' 'Should we always trust our reason instead?' they ask. Others are wary of feelings spiralling out of control. You only have to dip into the descriptions of intemperate revivalism like the magnificent (if strange) Fits, Trances, and Visions by Ann Taves, to realise that sometimes telling people not to trust their feelings is the right pastoral thing to do!³ As long as we also tell people not to always trust their thinking either. Because as alarming as the weird and wonderful world of Fits, trances and visions may be, no less alarming – for any Bible-believing Christian – is what developed from the secular rationalism of the Enlightenment to various streams of liberalism today. Some bow before the idol of experience, others bow before the idol of intellect. Both need to repent and worship the God who reveals Himself in His Word, to our hearts, minds, souls and strength – all of which are to love Him.

3. Ann Taves, Fits, Trances, and Visions (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1999).

What are affections?

Affections are orientated towards godly desires in the godly person

Godly affections are the vibrant experience of the godly.

Consider the Psalms. Even a cursory reading tells us that God cares how we feel. Remember not every emotion listed in the Psalms is approved by God. But the full range (from joy to anger, from depression to peace, from hate to love) is recorded. Emotions are important enough for God to have them included in holy writ. Of course, the Psalms are far more than a therapy session where the psalmist lets it all hang out. They are a model of how to coordinate the full range of human emotions to the revelation of God.

For instance, Psalm 42, 'As a deer pants for flowing streams, so pants my soul for you, O God', is usually referenced as a sweet call to desire God. But it is also desperate: 'My soul thirsts for God, for the living God. When shall I come and appear before God? My tears have been my food day and night, while they say to me all the day long, "Where is your God?"... Why are you cast down, O my soul, and why are you in turmoil within me?' So the psalm is not describing a person on a religious high; this is someone on a religious low longing to renew their sense of connection with God. Being passionate, or affectional, does not mean, then, that if we feel slightly less excited, we must be slightly less holy. 'Hope in God; for I shall again praise him, my salvation and my God,' battling those emotions into line with the truth of God (Ps. 42:1-3, 5).

Another example is Psalm 126. There the tone is uniformly upbeat – or so at first it appears. 'Then our mouth was filled with laughter, and our tongue with shouts of joy.' Such laughter and joy is directed towards mission: 'then they said among the nations, "The LORD has done great things for them."' They were not just having a good time with God; they were celebrating because nations all around the world were hearing what great things God had done. And even in that celebration there is a note of realism: 'Those who sow in tears shall reap with shouts of joy' (Ps. 126:2, 5).

Burning Hearts

A New Testament illustration is Paul. As an ancient Middle-Eastern Jew, some of his expressions of emotion are determined by that background and culture (perhaps including the 'holy kiss' in Romans, 1&2 Corinthians and 1 Thessalonians). Still, Paul's affection is not only a product of his culture, it is a product of the gospel. '... [W]e could have made demands as apostles of Christ. But we were gentle among you, like a nursing mother taking care of her own children. So, being affectionately desirous of you, we were ready to share with you not only the gospel of God but also our own selves, because you had become very dear to us' (1 Thess. 2:6-8).

Sometimes in his letters to the Corinthians, Paul is like a parent who is being driven crazy by his adolescent children with their partying and general mayhem. He is not cold and calculating; he is passionate, and a little unhinged in a good way, like a mum or dad get a little unhinged when a child comes home two hours later than they said and the parents are having nightmares about whether the child has died or not.

Apparently, Paul was emotional enough to cry a fair bit: 'For I wrote to you out of much affliction and anguish of heart with many tears, not to cause you pain but to let you know the abundant love that I have for you' (2 Cor. 2:4). He also blubbed when he was in Ephesus, '...serving the Lord with all humility and with tears' (Acts 20:19), which he wants them to recall when he has gone. 'Therefore be alert, remembering that for three years I did not cease night or day to admonish every one with tears' (Acts 20:31). And when he finally left Ephesus, all the elders let the waterworks flow, and kissed him too, 'And there was much weeping on the part of all; they embraced Paul and kissed him' (Acts 20:37).

What are affections?

That is not the usual way you say goodbye to your vicar.

Some of this is cultural and particular to Paul's own personality. It is as important not to fake passion (affectation) as it is to have passion. Ask yourself: what do I do when I am passionate about something outside of church life? That may be how I would expect to act when I am passionate about the things of God. If I do not cry when my much loved child leaves home for college, I am unlikely to cry when a missionary leaves for the mission field. But in one way or another, we are to say with Paul, 'I rejoiced in the Lord greatly' (Phil. 4:10), 'sorrowful, yet always rejoicing' (2 Cor. 6:10), 'I am overflowing with joy' (2 Cor. 7:4). Or as Peter put it, 'You believe in him and rejoice with joy that is inexpressible and filled with glory' (1 Pet. 1:8). Or Jesus, 'In that same hour he rejoiced in the Holy Spirit' (Luke 10:21).

Affections are not proof in themselves that someone is spiritual
If it is possible to undervalue affections in the Christian life, it is also possible to overvalue them. The sign of being a Christian, and of making progress as a Christian, is not whether you feel passionately, or express your emotions in ways that appear to others to be passionate. Salvation – becoming a Christian – is evidenced by sanctification – gradually growing as a Christian. The truth of the gospel is shown by the power of the gospel in changed lives. 'The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, self-control' (Gal. 5:22-23). The fruit of the Spirit is not weeping, or shouting, or (conversely) being prim and proper. The fruit of the Spirit is moral change.

Burning Hearts

What causes this spiritual change is the power of the gospel, the pure Word of God, the seed that goes down into our hearts, and over time gradually produces the fruit of increasing Christlikeness.

In the parable of the sower, Jesus explains, 'As for what was sown on rocky ground, this is the one who hears the word and immediately receives it with joy, yet he has no root in himself, but endures for a while, and when tribulation or persecution arises on account of the word, immediately he falls away' (Matt. 13:20-21). It is possible to have joy, even passionate joy, but for that passion to be short-lived. Simon of Samaria was baptised, 'amazed' at what the apostles were doing, and yet he was not 'right before God' (Acts 8:13, 21). Isaiah chapter 1 shows that religious excitement by itself is not what counts to God; God is looking for godliness of character, 'justice,' doing what is right, that flows from genuine worship of Him.

I remember one person who appeared to be soundly converted, became passionate for the work of the gospel for a season, and now, as far as I know, is nowhere spiritually. Passion may be important, it may be an inevitable part of being human, it may be necessary for good rational function, it may be the fuel for much godly endeavour, but it is not the sign of godliness itself. That is the fruit of the Spirit, perseverance, following Jesus to the end.

Affections then – rightly understood – are part of what it means to be human and are to be increasingly orientated towards godly desires in the Christian. How, though, does preaching relate to affections? To answer that question, we need to make sure we clearly understand what the Bible has to say about proclamation.

PT RESOURCES

RESOURCES FOR PREACHERS AND BIBLE TEACHERS

PT Resources, a ministry of The Proclamation Trust, provides a range of multimedia resources for preachers and Bible teachers.

Teach the Bible Series (Christian Focus & PT Resources)

The Teaching the Bible Series, published jointly with Christian Focus Publications, is written by preachers, for preachers, and is specifically geared to the purpose of God's Word – its proclamation as living truth. Books in the series aim to help the reader move beyond simply understanding a text to communicating and applying it.

Current titles include: Teaching Numbers, Teaching Isaiah, Teaching Amos, Teaching Matthew, Teaching John, Teaching Acts, Teaching Romans, Teaching Ephesians, Teaching 1 and 2 Thessalonians, Teaching 1 Timothy, Teaching 2 Timothy, Teaching 1 Peter, Bible Delight, Burning Hearts, Hearing the Spirit, Spirit of Truth, Teaching the Christian Hope, The Ministry Medical and The Priority of Preaching.

Practical Preacher series

PT Resources publish a number of books addressing practical issues for preachers. These include The Priority of Preaching, Bible Delight, Hearing the Spirit and The Ministry Medical.

Online resources

We publish a large number of audio resources online, all of which are free to download. These are searchable through our website by speaker, date, topic and Bible book. The resources include:

- sermon series; examples of great preaching which not only demonstrate faithful principles but which will refresh and encourage the heart of the preacher
- instructions; audio which helps the teacher or preacher understand, open up and teach individual books of the Bible by getting to grips with their central message and purpose
- conference recordings; audio from all our conferences including the annual Evangelical Ministry Assembly. These talks discuss ministry and preaching issues.

An increasing number of resources are also available in video download form.

Online DVD

PT Resources have recently published online our collection of instructional videos by David Jackman. This material has been taught over the past 20 years on our PT Cornhill training course and around the world. It gives step by step instructions on handling each genre of biblical literature. There is also an online workbook. The videos are suitable for preachers and those teaching the Bible in a variety of different contexts. Access to all the videos is free of charge.

The Proclaimer

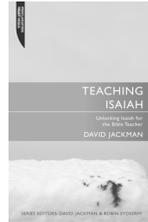

Visit the Proclaimer blog for regular updates on matters to do with preaching. This is a short, punchy blog refreshed daily which is written by preachers and for preachers. It can be accessed via the PT website or through www.theproclaimer.org.uk.

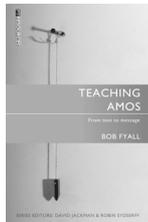

'Teaching' titles from
Christian Focus and PT Resources

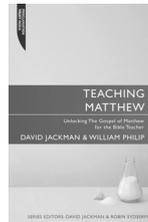

Teaching Numbers
ISBN 978-1-78191-156-3

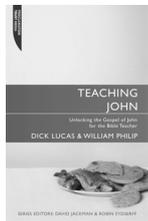

Teaching Isaiah
ISBN 978-1-84550-565-3

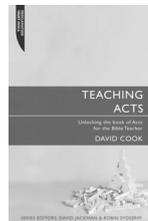

Teaching Amos
ISBN 978-1-84550-142-6

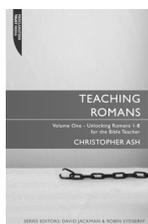

Teaching Matthew
ISBN 978-1-84550-480-9

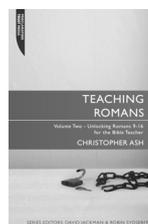

Teaching John
ISBN 978-1-85792-790-0

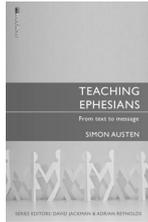

Teaching Acts
ISBN 978-1-84550-255-3

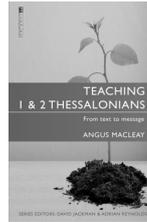

Teaching Romans (1)
ISBN 978-1-84550-455-7

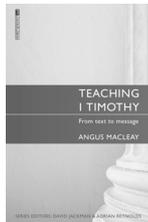

Teaching Romans (2)
ISBN 978-1-84550-456-4

Teaching Ephesians
ISBN 978-1-84550-684-1

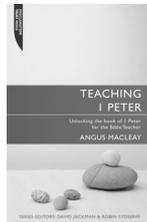

Teaching 1 & 2 Thessalonians
ISBN 978-1-78191-325-3

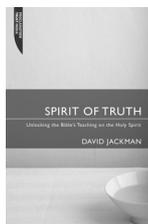

Teaching 1 Timothy
ISBN 978-1-84550-808-1

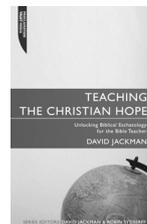

Teaching 2 Timothy
ISBN 978-1-78191-389-5

Teaching 1 Peter
ISBN 978-1-84550-347-5

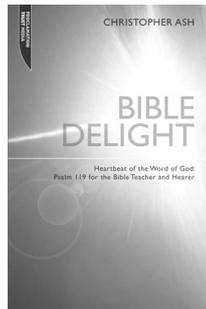

Spirit of Truth
ISBN 978-1-84550-057-3

Teaching the Christian Hope
ISBN 978-1-85792-518-0

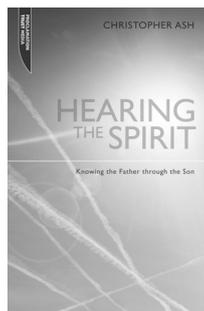

Bible Delight

ISBN 978-1-84550-360-4

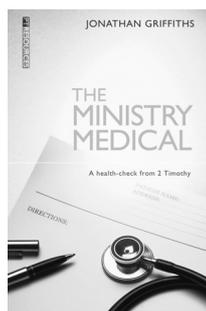

Burning Hearts

ISBN 978-1-78191-403-8

Hearing the Spirit

ISBN 978-1-84550-725-1

The Ministry Medical

ISBN 978-1-78191-232-4

The Priority of Preaching

ISBN 978-1-84550-464-9

ABOUT THE PROCLAMATION TRUST

We exist to promote church-based expository Bible ministry and especially to equip and encourage biblical expository preachers because we recognise the primary role of preaching in God's sovereign purposes in the world through the local church.

Biblical (the message)

We believe the Bible is God's written Word and that, by the work of the Holy Spirit, as it is faithfully preached God's voice is truly heard.

Expository (the method)

Central to the preacher's task is correctly handling the Bible, seeking to discern the mind of the Spirit in the passage being expounded through prayerful study of the text in the light of its context in the biblical book and the Bible as a whole. This divine message must then be preached in dependence on the Holy Spirit to the minds, hearts and wills of the contemporary hearers.

Preachers (the messengers)

The public proclamation of God's Word by suitably gifted leaders is fundamental to a ministry that honours God, builds the church and reaches the world. God uses weak jars of clay in this task who need encouragement to persevere in their biblical convictions, ministry of God's Word and godly walk with Christ.

We achieve this through:

- PT Cornhill: a one year full-time or two-year part-time church based training course
- PT Conferences: offering practical encouragement for Bible preachers, teachers and ministers' wives
- PT Resources: including books, online resources, the PT blog (www.theproclaimer.org.uk) and podcasts

Christian Focus Publications

Our mission statement –

STAYING FAITHFUL

In dependence upon God we seek to impact the world through literature faithful to His infallible Word, the Bible. Our aim is to ensure that the Lord Jesus Christ is presented as the only hope to obtain forgiveness of sin, live a useful life and look forward to heaven with Him.

Our books are published in four imprints:

CHRISTIAN FOCUS

Popular works including biographies, commentaries, basic doctrine and Christian living.

CHRISTIAN HERITAGE

Books representing some of the best material from the rich heritage of the church.

MENTOR

Books written at a level suitable for Bible College and seminary students, pastors, and other serious readers. The imprint includes commentaries, doctrinal studies, examination of current issues and church history.

CF4•K

Children's books for quality Bible teaching and for all age groups: Sunday school curriculum, puzzle and activity books; personal and family devotional titles, biographies and inspirational stories – because you are never too young to know Jesus!

Christian Focus Publications Ltd,
Geanies House, Fearn, Ross-shire,
IV20 1TW, Scotland, United Kingdom.
www.christianfocus.com

