Pornography is a silent epidemic that is destroying people, families, and marriages. I have felt so alone in this whole ugly pornography struggle—the betrayal, the destruction of trust, the anger, the isolation, and the pain—that, at times I struggle to breathe. - Grace

I am broken, devastated, feel betrayed, trust is broken. The Holy Spirit led me on Monday morning to check out the history on my husband's computer. There was porn. I confronted him about it and he first denied it. Then he said he was doing it to get filled up. He admitted to masturbation as well. He claims he's struggling to stop. - Tina

My husband has struggled with masturbation since before we got married. I found out a week before our wedding. He has always exhibited great sorrow for the way it hurts me and I believe true repentance. He is a man of God, but he feels hopeless in this area because he desperately wants to be done with it, but can't seem to conquer it for good, though he does have periods of victory. Last weekend I went out of town. When I got back, he confessed to masturbating and that this time he had intentionally sought out Internet porn. - Rachel

My husband struggles with porn and although he made mention of having struggled with it before we started dating, I honestly had no idea
